About the Author

Alan Clements is an author, journalist, spoken-word artist, and former Buddhist monk who trained in Burma under the renowned meditation masters Mahāsi Sayadaw and Sayadaw U Pandita before being expelled for defying the military dictatorship. He became one of the first Westerners to bring Burma's spiritual and political struggle to global attention through his books, lectures, and human-rights advocacy.

His works include Burma: The Next Killing Fields? (foreword by His Holiness the Dalai Lama), The Voice of Hope (with Aung San Suu Kyi), A Future to Believe In, Instinct for Freedom, Conversation with a Dictator: A Challenge to the Authoritarian Assault, and Unsilenced: Aung San Suu Kyi – Conversations from a Myanmar Prison.

Clements's writings have appeared in The New York Times, Time, The Guardian, and Newsweek, and have been featured on BBC, CNN, CBC, and ABC Nightline. His spoken-word performances and books merge spirituality, politics, and conscience into one continuous act of artful defiance — what he calls “the revolution of the spirit.”

With Politics of the Heart: Nonviolence in an Age of Atrocity, Clements offers his most visionary and urgent work to date — a luminous fusion of literature and liberation, grounded in the conviction that awareness itself is the final frontier of freedom.
